

VOCATIONAL RE-DIRECTION EVALUATION (VE)

What is it?

An objective vocational evaluation aimed at determining the client's occupational skills, ability and interests taking into account the individual's current functional capacity for working.

The results are then used to identify suitable and safe alternative job opportunities available in their local labour market.

In addition vocational rehabilitation recommendations to enable and support the client and prospective employers in taking advantage of any identified opportunities are also included.

The service differs from a Transferrable Skills Analysis by including a face to face evaluation and research to identify relevant locally available job opportunities.

Who is it for?

A service suitable for client's whose functional capacity for work has reached its optimum post accident level and who require specialist vocational advice and support to identify realistic job opportunities in their local labour market.

The evaluation is used as part of an ongoing rehabilitation programme to identify local vocational opportunities for the client to explore. It can also be used in conjunction with Vocational Rehabilitation Case Management service for clients requiring additional job searching support to take advantage of any opportunities identified.

What does the service offer?

- A customised and in depth vocational evaluation
- Research into the local labour market identifying relevant job opportunities in the local labour market
- A Concise report with recommendations and analysis of the local labour market that identifies realistic and available job options.
