

WORK CAPACITY EVALUATION (WCE)

What is it?

A combined vocational and functional evaluation designed to determine the extent of the client's ability to safely perform relevant work tasks. The evaluation is in two parts and takes place over one day. It covers;

- Occupational profile (interests, ability and aptitude)
- Transferrable work experience and skill set
- Functional and cognitive capacity for work
- Identifies a structured vocational rehabilitation plan

Who is it for?

A service for clients no longer employed following an accident. The evaluation will determine their safe functional and vocational capacity for work together with a Transferable Skills Analysis. It is also for client's who are unsure what occupational direction may be suitable following an accident.

The evaluation is delivered jointly by an experienced Occupational Therapist using the Matheson system and qualified Vocational evaluator and is usually conducted as part of an ongoing programme or as a precursor to establish direction in potential rehabilitation support.

What does the service offer?

- A bespoke objective vocational and functional evaluation
- A clinical assessment of mobility, postural tolerances, fitness and endurance
- An assessment of factors such as pain, psychological, social, vocational or educational issues
- A concise report detailing findings and impact of current functional and vocational ability on work activities
- Vocational recommendations for suitable job options to aid the client to overcome barriers and to re-engage with work, if appropriate
